

With a tradition of over 100 years, the Bucharest University of Economics Studies has awarded over 300 000 bachelor, master and PhD graduates. With 22 faculties, our University registers over 22 000 students during the 2015 / 2016 academic year.

The studies at the Bucharest University of Economic Studies are organized according to the following system:

- Bachelor degree in economics (3 years, 6 semesters – 180 ECTS);
- Master degree (2 years, 4 semesters – 120 ECTS);
- PhD degree (3 years, 180 ECTS).

Romanian education system

The academic year lasts 10 months and the classes are organized in 14 weeks-long semesters (with an average workload of 30 ECTS/semester and 60 ECTS/year). Classes start on October 1st.

- Winter semester lasts from October until the end of January;
- Summer semester starts mid-February and ends in early June.

There are two regular exam sessions:

- Winter semester exam session: February;
- Summer semester exam session: June.

There is also a reevaluation session in June-July for the students who missed or failed exams during the regular session.

Classes are organized in two types of activities:

- lectures: classes held in large classrooms (80-100 students), usually as exposés of the teacher;
- seminars (tutorials): classes with a smaller group of students (15-20 students) carried out in order to apply theoretical knowledge learned during the lectures: case studies, text analysis, debates, applications, simulations.

There are 24-26 hours/week for the bachelor studies and 15-18 hours/week for the master programs. According to each professor's requirements, students may be requested to carry out individual study:

- library study;
- projects;
- research papers;
- applications;
- case studies etc.

The classes are 90 minutes long and take place from Monday to Friday and sometimes Saturday, from 7:30 until 21:00. For the master courses, it is possible to have classes during the week-end.

The official language of instruction is Romanian, but there are special programs, where all the subjects are taught in foreign languages: English, French or German.

Subjects can be compulsory, elective/optional and free. The compulsory subjects are available every year, while the other two categories depend on the number of potential students choosing them. This classification of subjects is available only for the regular students; the Erasmus+ and exchange students can draw up their subjects list according to their profile, choosing subjects “à la carte” from all the years of study, under the condition that the chosen subjects are available during the respective semester.

In the case of the faculties which have also classes taught in Romanian, some of the elective or free subjects may be only available in Romanian since they are taught for students from different series or faculties. The availability of these subjects in a foreign language is confirmed at the beginning of each semester.

Erasmus+ students are automatically registered to the courses based upon their learning agreements. Since these courses are available in different faculties, learning agreements are managed centrally, by the Department for International Relations.
